Liu Zhonghua said that it’s almost impossible for Chinese people to donate their organs. “We cannot find (organs from voluntary donations), almost none.”

When asked if people who are unrelated to the patient are reluctant to donate organs, he replied, “Of course, who wants to give (his/her organs) to you?!”

(Liu had participated in 56 kidney transplant surgeries by April 2003.)

Phone Investigation Recording

Investigator: Does what you said just now show that it’s impossible for organ transplants in China to rely on people donating their organs? Is (the hope of) getting donated organs too slim?

Liu Zhonghua: Right, we can’t find any, almost none.

Investigator: According to the current media reports, the organ donors are all relatives of the patients.

Liu Zhonghua: Yes, in most cases. Of course, we are still working on this, and it’s just a start.

Investigators: Are people, who have no relations with the patients, usually reluctant to donate their organs?

Liu Zhonghua: Of course, who wants to give (his/her organs) to you?! Purchasing and selling organs is strictly prohibited. It’s not allowed.

Investigator: How about the peak time for organ transplantation before year 2006?

Liu Zhonghua: It was not like that. Not all of them.

Investigator: What was happening in the past? Where were the organs from?

Liu Zhonghua: I don’t want to talk more about the things in the past, let’s forget about this...

Investigator: You don’t want to talk about it, I understand. But let me tell you: according to Bai Shuzhong from the General Logistics Department of the People’s Liberation

Army, it was Jiang Zemin, who verbally ordered to harvest organs from living Falun Gong practitioners for transplantation...

Liu Zhonghua: (suddenly raised his voice) Let's stop talking! Stop, no more talk about other things, okay? I am still busy... (Liu hung up the phone.)
