He participated in many conferences that were specifically designed to slander Falun Gong. He spoke at the United Nations General Assembly on Human Rights and the Chinese People's National Political Consultative Conference; He wrote over ten thousand words to attack Falun Gong. His hate-provoking speeches were quoted by the regime's mouthpiece media, such as Xinhua News Agency, People's Daily and China Central Television (CCTV). These reports misled public opinion and exported hatred and added fuel to the persecution of Falun Gong. By the time of this report, at least 2,757 Falun Gong practitioners have been persecuted to death. Evidence of Sheng's public defamatory reports and speeches include:

According to the “Anti-Atrocity Alien Deportation Act” (see appendix), the WOIPFG will submit Sheng’s criminal records to each country’s department of customs and immigration.

The Anti-Atrocity Alien Deportation Act

On Dec. 17, 2004, US President George W. Bush signed in Washington DC, a bill authorized the Department of Justice to track foreigners who have committed war crimes, torture, genocide, persecution of religious beliefs and violations of human rights, and to restrict their entry or to have them removed. Under the new bill, those who have once tortured others, committed crimes of genocide or persecuted religious believers, are not allowed to enter the United States and should be removed from the United States. The bill also expanded reasons of prohibited entry and deportation: foreigners who are involved in (1) torture and murder abroad; (2) "genocide" and "particularly severe violations of religious freedom". The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Act Section 212 (a) (2) (G) states that foreign government officials who have been involved in serious violations of religious freedom in the past two years, they and their families and children are not allowed to enter the United States.
